BRITISH NOBILITY AND KNIGHTHOODS TO CANADIANS

The British Nobility is headed by the Queen (or King) and her children who are Princes and Princesses. The five grades of the British Nobility are Dukes, Marquis, Earls, Viscounts and Barons. A Baronet is one rank below the peerage granted by the Sovereign and confers upon the person the right to be called Sir and to use the post-nominal letters Bt. Unless previously knighted, a Baronet is not necessarily a Knight Bachelor. The title of Baronet is a hereditary title, the title being passed on to the oldest son.

A Knight Bachelor ranks behind a Baronet and confers upon the person the right to be called 'Sir' and to use the post-nominal letters Kt. There are also six official British Orders of Chivalry: The Most Noble Order of the Garter; The Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle; The Most Honourable Order of the Bath; The Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George; The Royal Victorian Order, and; The Most Excellent Order of the British Empire. Admission to the first two orders automatically confers Knighthood (although most appointments are to those already members of the peerage) and admission to the first two classes of the other four orders confers knighthood (Bath GCB & KCB; St Michael and St. George GCMG & KCMG; Royal Victorian Order GCVO & KCVO; and Order of the British Empire GBE & KBE). Thus, the peerage has five classes; a Baronet is between the peerage and knighthood; and, knighthood is granted to a Knight Bachelor and to those admitted to the top two grades of the six orders of chivalry. Before being admitted to a grade of a British Order of Chivalry, which confers knighthood, the person is first knighted as a knight bachelor and then receives the insignia of the order.

No person born in Canada has ever been made a Duke but His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught (1911 - 1916), third son of Queen Victoria, and the Duke of Devonshire (1916 - 1921), were Governor Generals of Canada. Five Marquis have served as Governor General in Canada but no Canadians have been made a Marquis. Also, no Canadians have been made an Earl although several Earls have served as the Governor-General of Canada, the last one being Earl Alexander of Tunis (1946- 1952).

Richard Bedford Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada from 1930 to 1935, and born in New Brunswick, was made a Viscount. His title, conferred after he moved to Britain in 1941 was Viscount Bennett of Mickleham, Calgary and Hopewell. As he had no heir, the title died with him. The British Commander of the Canadian Corps when they took Vimy Ridge was Lieutenant-General The Honourable Sir Julian Hedworth George Byng, later made a Field Marshal and who after serving as Canadian Governor-General (1921 - 1926) was made the Viscount Byng of Vimy, but of course was not a Canadian. The only other Canadian to be made a Viscount was Thomas Hamar Greenwood, born in Whitby, Ontario and who became Viscount Greenwood in 1937. Greenwood was also a Baronet and a Baron.

The first native-born Canadian to be knighted was Daniel Jones from Upper Canada who was made a Knight Bachelor in 1836. Prior to Confederation only a few knighthoods were granted to Canadians or to British subjects for services done mainly in Canada. None of the Fathers of Confederation held titles but Queen Victoria made the first Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath on the day the Confederation of Canada was proclaimed, 1 July 1867. This caused Macdonald immediate problems because his French-Canadian lieutenant, George Etienne Cartier, and Alexander Galt, his first finance minister, both major architects of the British North American Act, had not received a comparable honour. The ensuing uproar over this omission led to a Baronetcy for Cartier in 1868 and a KCMG for Galt in 1869. George Etienne Cartier, Alexander Tilloch Galt, William Pearce Howland, William McDougall, Samuel Leonard Tilley, and Charles Tupper were all made Civil Commanders of the Order of the Bath (CB) on 1 July 1867. All but McDougall would receive a Baronetcy or be knighted later.

Recommendations for knighthoods were the prerogative of the Governor-General. Macdonald was a strong supporter of titles and during his two terms in office pressed for more awards and for government input to awards. Macdonald's successor, Alexander Mackenzie (1873 - 1878), a Liberal, was hostile to honours and refused a knighthood. Mackenzie, furious over a proposed award to a government employee (Sandford Flemming) without the government's approval, put his case strongly to the Home Secretary in 1877. The Home Secretary was reluctant to agree to government input and the hostility continued resulting in few awards during this period. Mackenzie was the only Canadian Prime Minister not knighted until Arthur Meighen became Prime Minister in 1920.

There were few honours awarded during Mackenzie's term as Prime Minister (1873 - 1878) but he did try to have George Brown, who played a prominent part in the Quebec Conference of 1864 and was regarded as the power behind the Mackenzie administration, awarded a knighthood. Brown, true to his Liberal principals, refused the honour. In Macdonald's first list on his return to power in 1878, two Liberals (Cartwright and Howland) plus three Conservatives (Tilley, Tupper and Campbell) were included. The country was clearly becoming polarized on the honours question with Conservatives approving of them and Liberals not. Mackenzie's successor as Liberal leader, Edward Blake, also refused a knighthood.

With Conservatives once again in power, it became the practice in 1879 to knight the Chief Justices of the four provinces on appointment to office. Other recipients were usually engaged in public affairs, members of the cabinet (especially finance and militia), senior persons in banking and railway development and Provincial Lieutenant-Governors.

Sir John A. Macdonald died in office in 1891 and three of his four Conservative successors were knighted once in office (Abbott, Thompson, and Bowell) while Tupper had been knighted prior to taking office.

When Wilfrid Laurier, a Liberal, became Prime Minister in 1896, he declined a knighthood. However, when he arrived in England for the Diamond Jubilee celebrations for Queen Victoria, he learned that his name was on the Queen's Honour List for 1897. Although strongly opposed to accepting the award of a GCMG, he was persuaded by his advisors to accept the award so as not to disrupt the Jubilee ceremonies.

Laurier resisted attempts to have his ministers knighted and while public reaction to his award was favourable, he always considered the title a political liability. In 1902, Laurier had Parliament petition the King to consult his Canadian Ministers in matters relating to honours to Canadians.

The Colonial Office was told "it is not in harmony with the principles of our constitutional system that the Governor-General make recommendations without the advice of Canadian Ministers". The Colonial Office again refused Canadian Government input and a major controversy arose in 1911 when Bonar Law, the only Canadian to become a British Prime Minister, secured a Knight Bachelor for an expatriate Canadian, Max Aitken. Aitken went on to receive a Baronetcy and later was made a Baron, Lord Beaverbrook, further awards that angered Canadian Liberals.

Sir Robert Borden, Canadian Prime Minister (1911 - 1920) was originally elected as a Conservative and continued the Conservative tradition of encouraging Knighthoods. However, a Knighthood to Sam Hughes, a Baronetcy for Joseph Flavelle and a peerage for Hugh Graham, were all pointed out as examples of the British continuing to prevent Canadian input into the awarding of these honours.

Borden himself was made a GCMG in 1914. During the First World War, several honours were made to individuals involved in the war effort and to serving Canadian officers, such as General, Sir Arthur Currie, first Canadian to command the Canadian Corps.

As the head of the Unionist Government elected in 1917, Borden was under considerable pressure to do away with British Honours. On 22 May 1919, the so-called Nickel Resolution was adopted by the House of Commons asking the British Government to exclude Canadians from receiving honours of any kind, titular or non-titular. It is important to point out that this was not passed as a law but only as a resolution. Thus, Canadians living in Britain were not excluded from knighthoods (such as George Parkin, KCMG 1920) but the Governor-General of Canada no longer recommended awards.

When Richard Bennett, a Conservative, became Prime Minister (1930 - 1935), he lifted the ban on British honours. In the New Years Honour List of 1933 (Canada Gazette, 4 February 1933), he had Sir George Perley, Minister without Portfolio and frequent acting-Prime Minister, elevated from a KCMG to a GCMG. The reaction of the Canadian public was mixed so he delayed any further honours until the New Years Honour List of 1934 although the Imperial Service Medal was awarded generously in 1933. The 1934 New Years Honour List saw the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Right Honourable Lyman Poore Duff made a GCMG and the Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec, The Honourable Joseph Mathias Tellier made a Knight Bachelor. In addition, four CMGs, seven CBEs (including Miss Charlotte Whitton, later Mayor of Ottawa), eleven OBEs and sixteen MBEs were announced.

In His Majesty's Birthday list of 4 June 1934, Charles Saunders was made a Knight Bachelor and Dr. Frederick Banting was made a KBE. There were also four CMGs, five CBEs and one OBE announced.

The King's New Years Day list of 1935 had a Knighthood for the Chief Justice of Nova Scotia (Chisholm), a KCMG for Gooderham and a KBE for Lindsay. The list also included a CB for Major-General Andrew McNaughton, two CMGs, one military CBE, one military OBE and one military MBE. In the Civil Division of the Order of the British Empire, there were five CBEs, 14 OBEs, and 16 MBEs. There was also a military and civil BEM awarded.

In the Birthday list, which also commemorated the 25th year of King George V's Reign, a large Canadian list was included. This list dated 3 June 1935 (published in the Canada Gazette 29 June 1935) included four Knighthoods (Chapais, Grier, MacMillan and Roberts); one KCB (MacBrien), one GCMG (White), one KCMG (Marler), one CB (Ashton), and eleven CMGs. In the military division of the Order of the British Empire, Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Willis O'Connor, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General was made a CBE, Major E.L.M. Burns was made an OBE and three Warrant Officers First Class were made MBEs. From the Royal Canadian Air Force, Squadron Leader G.E. Brooks was made an OBE and Warrant Officer First Class A.A. Rabnett an MBE. Commander Robert Agnew, RCN was awarded an OBE and Commissioned Victualling Officer John George Buckner Horne, RCN was awarded an MBE. In the Civil Division of the Order, Mr. E.W. Beatty was made a GBE and Mr. A.G. Doughty and Mr. J.C. McLennan were both made KBE. There were also nine CBEs, 21 OBEs (including Lester B. Pearson) and 39 MBEs.

In addition, the list included six awards of the Companion of the Imperial Service Order (ISO). This order is not one of the orders of chivalry but is awarded for meritorious services on the part of members of the administrative and clerical branches of the Civil Service throughout the British Commonwealth. At least 25 years of service are usually required for this honour. There is also an Imperial Service Medal, which is given under the same terms as the ISO but to more junior members of the civil service. In July 1936, 61 Imperial Service Medals were awarded to Canadians.

Prime Minister Bennett had chosen those to reward very carefully and the honours were reasonably well received by the Canadian public. However, when his government fell in late 1935, this temporary opening of the door to Canadians receiving British honours was slammed shut forever by the MacKenzie King Government. Under the terms of the Nickel Resolution, Canadian servicemen remained eligible for British Military decorations for valour and distinguished service. It was not until 1943 that a parliamentary committee allowed the ban to be lifted for service personnel and civilians to receive non-titular honours for war service. A Canada Medal had been prepared and designed in 1943 and received all necessary approvals. The Prime Minister was then asked to approve a list of the first recipients.

The following from 'The Mackenzie King Record' by J.W. Pickersgill outlines what happened to this medal: "One irritating question of lesser importance was what to do about the Canada Medal. This medal had been established some time before without any clear conception of its purpose. E.H. Coleman, the Under Secretary of State, had prepared a memorandum on the procedure for awarding of the medals that Mackenzie King went over with him on October 29, 1943. He was 'exasperated' at the whole business. It was simply a case of giving to him that hath, following a list of precedence from the Governor-General down, including Princess Elizabeth of England. The medal was to be one for fairly wide distribution to people who had rendered extra special service, something beneath the decorations. I told Coleman I would not take the responsibility of making recommendations and thought we would be wise to withhold all awards of the medal until after the war. At the Cabinet meeting on 3 November 1943, his colleagues agreed the Medal was intended to be awarded 'because of extra special service, not something to be given to all those who already have the highest positions'. When it was suggested the Government might have to proceed to make awards because of steps already taken (including the minting of 14 medals), Mackenzie King observed 'this got under my skin at once and I said it was the strongest of reasons why we should not proceed any further; that I objected altogether to these matters being forced on the cabinet; that nothing should be done.' Thus the Canada Medal was permanently set aside and no Canadian awards given until 1967. While Mackenzie King was opposed to honours, he still accepted the Order of Merit from King George VI in 1946.

The ban on Canadians receiving knighthoods or appointments to the peerage has continued since 1935. However, several Canadians have received knighthoods for services rendered while serving the British Government and after taking out British citizenship. Sir William Samuel Stephenson, 'A Man called Intrepid', was knighted in 1946 for his part in the secret service during World War Two. Sir Leonard Outerbridge was knighted in 1946 while living in Newfoundland that was of course prior to that province joining confederation. Air Vice-Marshal Tait (RAF), Air Marshal Livingston (RAF) and General Charles Loewen (British Army) are all examples of Canadians who took out British citizenship and received knighthoods for their service to Britain through the British Armed Forces. Roy Thomson took out British citizenship before being appointed Baron Thomson of Fleet.

I have not included in the listings the many persons living in Canada who hold hereditary titles or who were knighted for services prior to settling in Canada. Such persons include General Sir Neil Ritchie, GBE (1951), KCB (1947), KBE (1945), DSO (1917), MC. (1916), CB (1944), CBE (1940) who was born in British Guiana and moved to Canada in 1960 so cannot be considered a Canadian Knighthood or Canadian GBE; Sir Edgar Vaughan, KBE (1963) who was born in Wales and came to Canada in 1967 after being awarded the KBE so is not a Canadian KBE, and; Sir David Bate, KBE (1978) who was born outside of Canada and his services were performed mainly in Nigeria coming to Duncan, B.C. to live after receiving the KBE. A more recent example is Mr. Trevor Pinnock, who received a CBE in 1992 and then came to Canada. Also a professor of mine at the University of Alberta, Dr. Greenhill, became Viscount Greenhill when his father died.

A distinctive Canadian honour was finally established during Canada's Centennial year, 1967 with two grades of the Order of Canada. The top grade was Companion of the Order of Canada and the second grade was the Medal of Service. In addition, a distinctive Canadian bravery award was created, the Order of Canada Medal of Courage. However, just as the Canada Medal of 1943 was never awarded, this bravery medal was also not awarded as it was too limiting to have only one level of bravery award. Thus in 1972, the Order of Canada was expanded to three grades, Companion, Officer and Member. Those individuals who had received the Medal of Service were made Officers of the Order. A distinctive military order was created, The Order of Military Merit with three grades, Commander, Officer and Member. In addition, the Medal of Courage was dropped and the Canadian Bravery Awards created with the Cross of Valour, Star of Courage and the Medal of Bravery created. These awards were to replace the British Orders and the British bravery decorations. A new grade of Canadian honours was created in 1984 with the introduction of the Meritorious Service Cross. This single decoration was expanded into the Meritorious Service Decorations in 1991 with the introduction of the Meritorious Service Medal and the creation of a civil division and a military division for each medal. The medals and ribbon of the civil and military divisions are identical except for a slim white line down the centre of the ribbon of the civil ribbons. Canadians still receive the Royal Victorian Order as this order is the Queen's personal order.

Three other British awards deserve a mention. The Companion of Honour is presented to distinguished British citizens and members of the Commonwealth. Ten Canadians have received this honour. Professor Anthony ('Tony') James PAWSON, OC, OOnt, CH and General John de Chastelain, OC, CMM, CD, CH.

The Order of Merit is also presented to distinguished British citizens and members of the Commonwealth and like the Royal Victorian Order, this award remains the prerogative of the Queen. The Right Honourable Jean Chrétien was made a member of the Order of Merit in 1909, only the fourth Canadian to receive this honour. This is the Order HRH Prince Phillip normally wears around his neck in full dress uniform or in evening dress. While not an official honour (there are no post nominal letters or ribbon), another highly cherished honour is the Royal Victorian Chain. This is also a prerogative of the Queen and two Canadians have received this honour.

Canadians have continued to receive some British awards but these are relatively rare. Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Matheson Holmes received an MBE in August 1986 and Mr. Ronald Southern, CM, CBE, received a civil CBE in 1995.

The Knighthoods section is set up in the following manner.

The names are set up in the following manner:

Canada	SURNAME, Given Names	Position or occupation
Gazette	Birthplace	Other awards received
	(if not born in Canada, the age at which they arrived in Canada is shown in brackets).

For convenience, the Provinces Ontario and Quebec have been used rather than Upper and Lower Canada or Canada West and Canada East.

Ontario = Upper Canada (used until 1841) = Canada West (Used 1841 to 1867)
Quebec = Lower Canada (used until 1841) = Canada East (Used 1841 to 1867)

+ = When a date has the symbol + after it, this signifies that the date is from the London Gazette and not from the Canada Gazette.

a = When a date has the symbol a after it, this signifies that the date is not from the London Gazette or the Canada Gazette but has been reported in another book such as Burke's Peerage.
