Her well-researched books, interviews with survivors of the blast and careful documentation of artifacts have inspired museum exhibits, annual commemorative services and school curriculum changes that preserve the memory of this significant moment in Canadian First World War history."

Awarded the Order of Nova Scotia (ONS) in 2018.

Janet Kitz died on 10 May 2019 in Halifax. She trained as a teacher in Glasgow and worked in that field for 20 years, first in London, then Davos, Switzerland, and then in the U.S. on the eastern shore of Maryland. She was teaching in Edinburgh when she was invited to attend a dinner as part of the Edinburgh Festival and was seated beside Leonard Kitz, who was there representing the National Arts Centre. They were married within the year and she moved to Halifax in 1971. Janet was a lifetime member of the Antiquarian Society of Halifax and a fellow of Royal Nova Scotia Historical Society, often using that forum for lectures on her research before she went to print with her books on the Halifax explosion, most notably "Shattered City, The Halifax Explosion and The Road to Recovery". Saint Mary's University awarded her an honorary degree in recognition that sound research and authorship of accessible books for a wide public is vital for society. Janet was on a number of boards and commissions but a favourite was the Point Pleasant Park Commission which she chaired for many years. She wrote a book about the park with a final chapter of photos of dogs and their owners. Until her very last years she walked her beloved Brittany spaniels in the park twice a day in all weather and enjoyed chatting with her dog-walking friends and all the park staff.

"Archivist and construction historian Frank Korvemaker has been instrumental in preserving and documenting Saskatchewan's architectural history. Among his many projects, he spearheaded a campaign to save the Claybank Brick Plant, now a National Historic Site (in 1997). His passion for conservation of the region's stone and brick buildings ensures that future generations have the opportunity to experience significant aspects of the province's rich industrial and agricultural heritage."

Toni and Frank Korvemaker

Born in Holland in 1947, Frank and his family emigrated to Canada in 1954 and settled in Montreal. From childhood Frank was fascinated with buildings, particularly old ones. He then came west to attend University in Calgary before finishing his degree in Regina in 1969. He met his wife in Saskatchewan. They raised four children here. Korvemaker spent 25 years working for the Heritage Branch of the Saskatchewan Government. The same week that he was sent a letter congratulating him on 25 years of service, he was also given a layoff notice. That challenge turned into an opportunity for Korvemaker to continue to pursue his historical interests. He was able to secure a job in the Provincial Archives. He finished his career there, but hasn't stopped working to preserve old buildings. He still works with the Claybank Brick Plant and is collecting information on the history on the Bell farm near Indian Head, where the famous round barn is located. Korvemaker also works on family and community histories and has written and co-authored several books on both Saskatchewan's history and its architecture.

"Lottery winner Rachel Lapierre decided to use her winnings to benefit the community by founding Le Book Humanitaire, a not-for-profit organization that follows a model of mutual assistance, co-operation and caring. Since its launch, Le Book Humanitaire has encouraged networking through Facebook and a website. To date, the organization has enabled donors to take concrete action over 15 000 times to help those most in need, both in Canada and abroad, and has become a model for social solidarity."

Rachel was Miss Quebec in 1982. She trained as a nurse and was working as an Emergency Room Nurse when she won the Quebecois lottery "Gagnant à vie" - $1,000 a week for life. She quit her nursing job and began working full-time on her charity covering a lot of the expenses with her own money.

“Dr. Ronald Oscar Linden is a pioneer in the treatment of diabetes in Canadians, particularly in the areas of research and hyperbaric medicine. Thanks to his work at the Judy Dan Research and Treatment Centre, the first centre of its kind in Canada, more than 600 people with complications from diabetes have been spared from having to undergo amputation.”

In 1987 he trained in the United States with the NOAA/UHMS course for physicians. Upon his return to Toronto, he joined the Hyperbaric Department at the Toronto General Hospital, where he provided hyperbaric medical care at the Toronto General Hospital to patients with decompression sickness, air embolus, carbon monoxide poisoning, radiation injuries from cancer treatments and in particular, chronic, non-healing diabetic leg and foot ulcers that otherwise would result in limb amputation.

In 2005, Dr. Linden incorporated the federally registered charity Ontario Wound Care Inc. and raised donations for the creation of a specialized centre to provide advanced wound care and hyperbaric oxygen therapy for patients suffering chronic, non-healing wounds and conduct medical research. The Judy Dan Research & Treatment Centre opened in January 2007 and has successfully treated thousands of patients.

"Robin Mednick founded Pencils for Kids (P4K) to provide basic supplies for students in rural Niger, where an entire class might share a single pencil. Over the past decade, P4K has gone on to build three schools, fund scholarships for girls, develop sustainable farming programs and offer micro-loans for starting small businesses. Garnering attention from governments and world bodies, the organization has brought the region's desperate needs to centre stage".

It all began in the fall of 2005 when Canadian athletes participated in the "The Games of La Francophonie" in Niger, West Africa. During the Games a group of athletes visited a school in Liboré, a commune outside Niamey, the capital of Niger. Thirty children in one classroom were sharing one pencil. There were few books and fewer supplies, no electricity and no running water. The athletes donated books that they brought with them from Canada. Dan Galbraith, a photographer for the Canadian Team returned to Toronto, but found day to day life hard to manage after having witnessed the extreme poverty in Niger. He called Robin Mednick and she sensed something was not right, as Dan sounded distraught on the phone. He explained that he could not get the images of the children in Niger out of his mind. His pain was so tangible Robin instinctively said, "Dan, let's not talk about it, let's do something!"

The first Pencils for Kids school was built in September 2007, in the village of Oulmantama where children had never before had access to education. Since that school opening in September, Pencils for Kids has worked to create a variety of sustainable programs in the community and income generating opportunities for women. The official opening of the school was in November 2007. Today over 100 students attend that first P4K school.

“Drawing from his past experience as a homeless youth, Joe Roberts created The Push For Change to raise awareness of homelessness. He set out on a 17-month journey across Canada pushing a shopping cart to more than 450 community events and 200 classrooms. His efforts have raised over half a million dollars for youth programs and have rallied community partners across the nation to take action.”

As a homeless youth trapped in drug addiction and living on the streets of East Vancouver in the 1980s, Joseph Roberts made two promises: (1) if he was ever able to escape his fate, he would do something to turn his life around, and (2) he would pay it forward. In 1991 Roberts entered recovery and by 1996 made the Dean's List as an Honour Roll Graduate at Loyalist College in Belleville, Ontario. He graduated with a 3.94 grade point average and earned two business diplomas. As fate would have it, Roberts became a successful entrepreneur by 2000, and made his first million in sales before he turned 35.

Since his own recovery, Roberts has inspired hundreds and thousands of Canadians with his personal story of transformation. He has written several books including Don't Buy the Lie About Getting High (for school students), Fred the Cat (a cartoon of Roberts' story) and his best-seller: 7 Secrets to Profit from Adversity. Roberts left the corporate world in 2003 to pursue his passion for public speaking. His words have filled people with hope and inspiration: Despite what adversity you find yourself in, you have it within yourself to overcome.

In 2016/17, to pay it forward Roberts pushed a shopping cart across Canada over 17 months in a campaign called The Push for Change. His goal was to raise funds and awareness to prevent youth homelessness. In preparing for his 17-month walk across Canada, Roberts volunteered for over three years to build the campaign – it was 100% funded by sponsors before the launch. Roberts walked 24 kilometres per-day for 517 days. During this time, he engaged thousands of Canadians with his personal story and message: Prevention is the key to ending youth homelessness. The walk raised $570,000 which was donated to charitable partners like Raising the Roof.
